"I should like to congratulate Fortnight on the achievement represented by the publication of its 200th edition. The forthright views often expressed in its pages have not, and could not have, pleased all of the people all of the time, but it has stimulated thinking and all of us who read Fortnight can say we have learned from it. Long may it continue."

GARRET FITZGERALD

"FORTNIGHT, a non-sectarian review. If you read nothing else from Northern Ireland, read Fortnight. Essential reading for anyone who even wants to pretend to know what's going on. Comprehensive 'diary' of politics/violence in time between each edition."

LABOUR WEEKLY

"While we would not agree with its editorial line, Fortnight has done a good job in providing a free speech platform of the various political groups in the North. It also covers cultural events in a way which – while again we would be critical of it – is not matched by any other publication here."

DANNY MORRISON

"It is extremely difficult for anyone living in Great Britain to keep in touch with the affairs of Northern Ireland. Our media is concerned with the violence in the province but rarely do the newspapers, radio or television, even begin to give us a flavour of the ideas and thoughts which abound here. Fortnight fills the gap for me as in a different geographical context when I was Secretary of State. Sometimes Fortnight makes me angry: it always makes me think."

MERLYN REES

"The 1982 Ewart-Biggs Memorial Award was presented last night by the Fine Gael leader, Dr FitzGerald, to the editorial committee of Fortnight magazine, the independent periodical review of Northern Ireland, at a reception in the National Gallery.

Lady Jane Ewart-Biggs, the ambassador's widow, who is now a Labour peer in the House of Lords, said of Fortnight: 'It was such a relief to be reading about Ulster in Ulster's language.'"

LADY EWART-BIGGS

"Not quite 'reconciling the two traditions' a la New Ireland Forum, but at least including both within its covers without exploding."

HENRY KISSINGER, EAT YOUR WORDS.

At the World Food Conference in 1974, Henry Kissinger promised hope to the Third World.

He proclaimed that by 1984, no child need go to bed hungry.

Since then, food production has soared. In fact the world now produces enough grain to give every person on earth a nourishing 3,000 calories a day.

But hunger is still on the increase. And there are now over 500 million people who suffer.

This is an outrage which can largely be laid at the door of the Western world.

Why? Because of greed. The rich world in which we live, comprising 30% of the global population, consumes over 80% of its resources.

This leads to literally millions going hungry every day. Which is why Oxfam has launched a new campaign.

We've called it 'Hungry for Change.' And it stems from a conviction that change is not beyond our reach.

But we need your support.

It may seem like an impossible task. But there are many ways you can help. They may only be small steps, but eventually they can lead to change.

First, arm yourself with the facts. (You'll find them in our information pack shown below.) When you're fully informed, spread the word. Talk to your friends, family and colleagues.

We'll be telling you how you can campaign, raise funds and get yourself sponsored for a fast.

But please give us your support. And please fill in the coupon.

Because every one of us has it within our power to help. But only together can we turn back the tide of hunger.

OXFAM in IRELAND
