

IRISH REPUBLICAN SOCIALIST PARTY

The Irish Republican Socialist Party is an organisation run by and for working class people. We are active throughout Ireland and fight tirelessly on behalf of normal working class families, proudly standing in the political tradition of James Connolly and our founder, Seamus Costello. Our movement perhaps came to most prominence when 3 of our members died on Hunger Strike in Long Kesh in 1981.

We strive to create a society where working people are at the heart of all the decision making processes, where the Irish people exercise full control over the nation's resources as well as their own political, social and economic destinies. Such a society cannot be created while part of Ireland continues to be occupied by British Imperialism. Accordingly, our struggle encompasses two key components, the fight for a United Ireland as well as that of Socialism.

The current crisis of capitalism is leading to an attack on the living standards of millions of working class people. Unemployment will rise, more will sink into poverty while those who got us into this mess, the bankers and speculators, are bailed out and rewarded with lavish bonuses and social ascendancy. It is fundamentally wrong that the working people of Ireland have to foot the bill time and time again for the careless risk-taking of these millionaires. We need a country that works for people, not against them.

In the North the Good Friday Agreement has copper-fastened the partition of the country as well as sectarian tension. It is Britain's presence in Ireland that has divided the Irish people along such artificial lines and Stormont and the GFA only serve to perpetuate this. The only settlement worth striving for is that of a 32 County Socialist Republic, where sectarianism will erode away and the exploitation of working people on behalf of a corrupt ruling class will be a thing of the past.
