A NEW OPPORTUNITY FOR PEACE

Mitchel Mc Laughlin,
Sinn Féin National Chairperson and Westminster Candidate for Foyle

The Irishmen and Irishwomen who challenged the British empire in 1916 and shook it to its core were acutely aware of the need for fundamental political change - change which the British government of the day was not prepared to advocate.

As we commemorate the anniversary of the Easter Rising a unique opportunity exists to send a powerful and vibrant message to the next British government. The forthcoming elections which Sinn Féin will contest in the coming months may be the most significant since partition divided our country in 1921.

The vision of a new Ireland which inspired the signatories of the Proclamation has remained the goal of Republicans to the present day. Still we find ourselves confronted by a British mindset which refuses to recognise that the concepts of negotiation and agreement must supplant the notions of defeat and surrender.

Sinn Féin is committed to achieving peace with justice, a peace which will guarantee to everyone equality and prosperity. Despite the attempts of the British government and the unionist leadership to deflect and obstruct our party, Sinn Féin's efforts to create a peace process, a process which will move us away from conflict, will continue.

Sinn Féin - above all parties - has the willingness and the capability to overcome British intransigence. We are committed to creating a credible process of negotiations against the background of a peaceful environment.

This is the message we will present to the electorate.

To the families and comrades of the fallen Volunteers of Derry Brigade, Óglaigh Na hÉireann, we send our solidarity and support, to the many activists still incarcerated in prison we pledge our commitment to campaign for your release, and to the nationalists and republicans of Derry we ask for your continuing support for the ideals laid down in the 1916 Easter Proclamation.
